The University of Sunderland's reputation as a life-changing institution has been further enhanced following a prestigious awards ceremony, dubbed the 'Oscars of Higher Education'. The University had been shortlisted for the event's most sought-after award, 'University of the Year'.

And while the prize ultimately went to Cardiff Metropolitan University, that did not stop Sunderland receiving praise for its efforts over the past 12 months.

"Being shortlisted for such a prestigious national award is public recognition of the outstanding work done by students and staff over recent years as we have sought to fulfil our purpose as a life-changing institution.
